VOLUME 1. NUMBER 37.

THE PACIFIC
Commercial Advertiser.

The Bachelor.

A bachelor sat at his blooming grate,
And he fell into a snoring;
And he dreamed that o'er his wrinkled pate,
Had been thrown the nuptial noose.

A rosy boy came to his side,
And bountied on his knee;
And back from his beaming face he shook Fair curls in childish glee.

Then clear rang out his merry voice;
He shouted aloud "Papa,
I don't love anybody else But you and my dear mamma."

Oh! the bachelor's heart o'erran with joy, So long by love unlit;
And from his unseen depths poured out Affection infinite.

Outstretching arms of strength unshorn, He hugged his old tom cat,
Which, as 'twas wont when master snoozed, Had leaped into his lap.

VARIETY.

Keep your temper in disputes. The cool hammer fashions the red-hot iron into any shape needed.

It is not well to be much displeased with harmless delusions that tend to make us happy.

Learn not to judge too rashly of any one, either in respect of good or evil, for both are dangerous.— Plato.

There is a certain species of pride which contradicts the ordinary symptoms of the feeling, and appears most elevated when it would be reasonable to expect it should be most depressed.

WORTH REMEMBERING.—The great secret of avoiding disappointments is not to expect too much. Despair follows immediate hope, as things fall hardest to the ground that have been nearest to the sky.

It is a singular fact that duels and suicides are unknown among the Turks. They believe in predestina-tion, and are rigidly opposed to the idea of hastening death by arsenic or gunpowder. The conduct of the Turks in this respect may be therefore held up as a model for polite imitation.

ADIEU.—This is an expression of farewell, familiarly used by all classes of people; but its derivation, which is a beautiful one, is perhaps not as generally known. It comes from the French word Adieu—to God—implying, I depart from you, leave you to the protection of Heaven.

NEVER.—Never put your beaver to a fine lady, and pass a poor widow without seeming to see her.

Never pass an aged man or woman, without making a reverential obeisance, unless your house is on fire.

Never break your neck to bow at all to a "sweet sixteen," with a flounced dress, who is ashamed of her old-fashioned mother: or to a strutting collegiate who is horrified at his grandmother's bad grammar.

Never keep a boy to blacken your boots and attend to the stable, while you frighten your wife out of the idea of keeping a nurse for the twins, by constantly talking of "hard times."

Never converse with a lady, with a cigar in your mouth, or smoke in anybody's company without apologizing for the same.

Never remind people of personal deformity, or of the relatives who have disgraced them.

Never leave a letter unanswered, and use the stamp which was enclosed to you to "reply with," on a letter to your own sweetheart.

Never ride in a fine carriage and keep a score of servants, while your widowed sister trudges on foot, and toils for her daily bread.

Never wear a finer coat than the merchant you owe for it, or the tailor whom you have not paid for the making.

Never turn a deaf ear to a woman in distress, because you cannot see how you would be the gainer by her bettered condition.

Never wound wantonly the sensitive nature of the constitutional invalid; nor by rude jests and sarcasms, send a blush to the temples of modest merit.

Never jest with a single woman about the anxiety of all women to be married; nor tell your wife you married her because you pined for her loneliness.

Never go to bed at ten, leaving your wife up till two, with a sick baby; and look piteously at her at the breakfast-table, because that meal is half an hour too late.

Never hear ungracious strictures upon the conduct of a woman, with a quiet smile, instead of saying in thunder tones, "It is false, sir."

Never fall back from a bargain after the articles of agreement are drawn up, and only need your signature to make them perfect.

Never insult the modest by ribaldry, the grave by levity, nor the pious by contempt of sacred things.

THE SAILOR SHIPWRECKED ON LAND.—If an honest heart beats in one bosom more warmly than in another, it is in that of the brave tar. Whether it be the many dangers that beset him on a perilous voyage, or a sense of loneliness while rocked upon the mountain wave, that leads him to cherish and lock up with sacred care his affections and the better feelings of his nature, and to keep them untouched by the scenes of vice and temptation of which he must often be a witness, certain it is that the American sailor is most sensitive to wrong, and more keenly touched by misfortune, than any other individual in the world. It may be that his adventurous life, teaching him, as it must, to cling to his shipmates as to his little world—his all—strengthens his nobler and kinder feelings, and warms them into livelier action, than the more monotonous and peaceful life of the landsman. A sailor, who had been long absent on a voyage, came into port the other day, and immediately left Boston on a visit to his friends in Vermont, whom he had left in health a number of years before. Upon his arrival at the spot, the light-hearted tar found that they had all died in his long absence. Even the bright-eyed girl whom he had left in all her vigorous bloom—and to whom he was betrothed—she who year after year had anxiously watched for his return—slept beneath the old sod of the valley! He retraced his steps, and when he met him on his return, he was seated by the roadside, weeping like a child. A feeling of loneliness had come over the noble-hearted fellow that touched a chord in his bosom which all the loneliness of the ocean could not reach. His home desolate—the cherished one of his heart, and the loved one of his youth—his affianced bride—the sturdy oak and the lily that bloomed in its shade—all gone forever.
The sailor was shipwrecked on land, and the bold heart who had withstood the beatings of the surge and the mountain wave—who had braved the perils of the deep in the midnight storm without the trembling of a nerve or the blink of an eye—had now lost sight of the polar star, and bitterly wept at the thought which had come upon him. Such a man has treasures within his bosom above all price—treasures which are the fruits of a nobler nature alone, and can be found imbedded in none other than an honest man.
